"My house is blowing away, my house is blowing away," a hysterical female voice over the phone shouted, then the line went dead.

That call to a Sudbury radio station was the first hint that a summer thundershower had turned deadly.

On Aug. 20, 1970, a 100-mile-an-hour tornado ripped through the northern Ontario mining town of Sudbury and the surrounding communities of Copper Cliff, Lively and Field without any warning.

The 10-minute windstorm resulted in the death of six people, injured 200 and caused over $17 million in damage. It was one of the worst tornados in Canadian history.
